Complex Civilization Forced Resignation,
Professor Nelson P. Mead Discovers

By Albert Margules

You can’t be a conscientious historian and a college president at one and the same time and still be able to find the time necessary to keep up with the chaotic world we call civilization. At least, so self-respecting historians claim.

That, in part, is the opinion of Dr. Nelson P. Mead who last week voluntarily resigned his $10,000-a-year position as president of City College to re-assume the chairmanship of the Department of History at the college.

The Board of Higher Education has designated Dr. Harry N. Wright, director of Evening and Extension, to succeed Dr. Mead as president.

This is what happened.

Two and one-half years ago, just before Dr. Mead replaced Dr. Robinson as head of the College, he was very happy as a history teacher.

He could study treaties, clip the New York Times, read the Foreign Affairs, and try to make notes and prophecies which he delved into and argue with his classes. Dr. Mead then became president and immediately fell heir to the numerous administrative problems, the endless details, the nightly public dinners, the budget making, and the budget cutting.

Dr. Mead then, adroitly, took his time and one detail necessary to the smooth running of the largest colleges in the country.

And then the world went mad.

"Events," as Dr. Mead put it, "started happening which to me, the world was changing." He soon was unable to keep up with all the notes and observing, found himself hard at the day job.

"For weeks at a time, I wouldn’t get a single night at home," he declared. "My digestion was so bad that, if I had eaten dinner, I wouldn’t have missed it." His first real meal was at the home of his family, and his second a hectic night when the Beavers met a strong Pomfret team.

Dr. Mead then had to give up his job, and the next morning, he was appointed to the Education Department of City College.

He is the author of numerous books, monographs and articles, which he delighted to argue over, and observe, and note upon, and make judgments upon.

Building Changes Will Increase Facilities

In order to augment social facilities at the School of Business, several alterations are being made in the building under the direction of Dean Herman Feldman.

The ultimate desire is to centralize all student activities on the ninth floor. The way is being prepared for the removal of the Townsend Harris offices from their present place to rooms near the elevator. Mrs. Wright's office will be moved into the room formerly used by the Girl's Lounges which in turn will be returned to its original site.

Room 56 formerly the social lounge is being renovated so that it may be made into two suitable classrooms.

The library has been enlarged by the addition of two rooms, but which were vacated by the creation of a dozen new rooms in the basement.

'45 Orientation Starts Today

Professor Danae is scheduled to conduct a Public Speaking session by hand-reading the entire group in a community sing, high-spotting Lavender.

After the assembly students will be seated through the building by an especially chosen and drilled group with the tour ending at the ninth floor for refreshments and games.

The one sad spot in the entire day's proceedings is the official notification that classes will be held from three o'clock on, all students required to attend.

Meanwhile at House Plan, 130 Lexington Avenue, an all-day reception will be in progress. A party luncheon was served at the ninth floor. Outside the gym and in the George Washington Library, all of them identifiable by arm-bands or posters, will conduct students who have finished their day's work to "138". Here another building tour and conversation with House Planners and approved Faculty guests are to be accompanied by tea and cookies.

On February 15 the class of '45 is invited to take part in the inauguration of a new tradition. The Dean's Reception to Freshmen. Upper classmen are strictly barred with admission by ticket only. Fun, games, entertainment and choice refreshments are promised but to the freshmen only.
