President Buell G. Gallagher has found himself in the midst of a hot controversy as a result of a statement he issued in response to a column written last week. In a Monday column, Mr. Koppett, in his usual melodramatic manner, depicted President Gallagher as one who would not give preferential treatment at registration to athletes while other students in the College did receive such benefits. He also said that Gallagher kept bringing up the phrase, "Don't call me Gallagher." Mr. Koppett, in his Monday column, charged President Gallagher with violation of the Inter-Club Board's rules which would result in his suspension due to "misbehavior." President Gallagher refused to take Mr. Koppett's columns as a basis for any action against interference, by President Gallagher. It was agreed that a panel of five, simultaneously held, would be composed to have Jay Rice, City College for Development Values in Thought and Action, the Conference approached the theme through a series of five, simultaneous, panel discussions. Each panel group consisted of a chairman selected from the faculty, two students and two other faculty members.

The Conference felt that the student must assume initiative in making values for himself, must know himself, and serve as a model for others. In the final analysis, the report stated, "The City College is obligated to create the circumstances, individual and group, that will result in a sense of belonging, individual responsibility, the College community and appreciation of the responsibilities of the individual for the enrichment of the values of other individuals and groups in the College community.

The Storm

At 10:21 a.m. yesterday Spring officially arrived on City College's campus. It was on this day last year that President Galbraith announced that City College would hold an open house for all people who wished to see the College. But yesterday the "open house" was overcast and cold, more like the storms that have been threatening the entire city this week. The weather was so bad that I'm afraid that many people may not have been able to see the College's "open house." But I'm sure that those who did would agree that the College is well worth the trip.

Column... Not In Good Taste

Printers Censor Sex Story

The controversy was proposed by the printers who were responsible for the printing of the sex story. The printers argued that the story was too sexually explicit and that it would cause a stir if it were printed. The story was written by a student who was not familiar with the rules of sex, and the printers believed that it was their duty to protect the students from such material.
