Council Committee Will Search For Dean

And before it was all over, Harry Pace had declared himself a candidate for the position of Dean of Students. How did this all come about? Read on, my children, read on and see his news.

What Harry had to tell the representatives was this—earlier in the week, he said, he had formed an Ad-Hoc Committee of the Dean of Students. The committee was an outgrowth of a discussion that had taken place at the Ad Hoc Committee for the selection of a new Dean of Students that had been called a few days earlier. The committee, he said, was the group that was ultimately responsible for the appointment of the new Dean of Students.

Jesse Lipman, Council Treasurer, who was in President Weaver's office when the demands were presented, but who was not a member of the committee, provided the best explanation of what President Weaver had really said. According to Jesse, Weaver had not said that he had no faith in a referendum to choose the dean, because he felt that it would not be objective, but rather a popularity contest.

Furthermore, President Weaver had explained the need to choose a new dean in secrecy, because most recruiting is done among people who have positions in other colleges, and if a person who was being considered publicly announced his desire for the position, he would be putting his present job in jeopardy. And as if he didn't get selected for this position, he would become rapidly unemployed.

As for the demand that the students select the dean, "the right to select the Dean of Students," it was explained that according to N.Y.U. by-laws, President Weaver is the one who is ultimately responsible for the appointment he makes, and as (Continued on Page 4)

Marketing Professor Harry Cohen Given Surprise Testimonial Dinner

Harry E. Cohen, Supervisor of the Undergraduate Marketing Department and the Dean of the New York Institute of the Marketing Department, was given a surprise testimonial dinner by the Advertising Club of New York on Tuesday, May 17, 1969.

The dinner, held at the Advertiser Club of New York, was attended by fellow faculty members, students, and friends. The dinner was a surprise to Professor Cohen, who was not expecting any special recognition. He was joined by many of his former students and colleagues, who came to celebrate his achievements and recognize his contributions to the field of marketing.

Professor Cohen has been a faculty member at the New York Institute of Technology for over 20 years. He has served in various capacities, including as the Dean of the Advertising Department. He has also been a prolific author, with numerous publications to his name.

The dinner was a testament to Professor Cohen's dedication to his students and his passion for the field of marketing. It was a night of celebration, with many speeches and tributes paid to his many accomplishments. The dinner was a fitting end to a distinguished career, and it is clear that Professor Cohen's contributions to the field of marketing will continue to be felt for years to come.

WASHINGTON — If you thought the country deserved political commentary, you're right. A new study shows that the country is ripe for a political commentary. It seems that the citizens of this country are looking for some kind of political commentary, and they're starting to find it. The study was conducted by a group of political scientists who surveyed a random sample of citizens. They found that the majority of respondents expressed a desire for more political commentary. The scientists concluded that if the country is to become a more informed electorate, it needs to find a way to provide more political commentary.

Congress Acts on Vietnam War As Oct. 15 Moratorium Nears

During the last week the public environment generally, and the press in particular, has become more critical of the President's Vietnam policy. The President has tried to react to this pressure but with limited success. The Constitutional Proceedings Committee, which recently pressed for an investigation of the war, was reappointed in the Senate on Tuesday. The three Democrats, Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, Senator Edward W. Brooke of Massachusetts, and Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, have been named to the new committee. The Republicans appointed in the Senate are Senator Arthur T. Huddleston Jr., Senator John G. Stennis of Mississippi, and Senator Mark Hatfield of Oregon. The committee is expected to hold hearings on the war this week.

The House of Representatives also acted on the war on Wednesday. The House approved a resolution calling for a moratorium on the war for 30 days. The resolution was passed by a margin of 323 to 67. The moratorium would be effective if Senate and the President would agree to it.

The war has been the subject of much discussion in recent weeks. The President's approval rating has dropped significantly, and the public has become more critical of the war. The moratorium resolution was supported by many members of Congress, including some Democrats who had previously opposed the war.

The moratorium would allow for a thorough review of the war and its impact on the United States and the world. It would also give the President an opportunity to consider alternative policies. The moratorium would not be binding, but it would send a strong message to the President and to the public.

The resolution was passed by a margin of 323 to 67 in the House of Representatives. The Senate is expected to consider the resolution in the near future.

The war has been a major issue for many years. It began in 1965 and has been the subject of much controversy ever since. The United States has been involved in the war for over 40 years, and it has cost the lives of thousands of Americans.

Miguel Luis Amanategui became one of the leading educational centers of Latin America. When Puerto Rico fell from Spanish rule following the Spanish-American War, Hostos returned to his homeland in a vain effort to urge his countrymen to work for national independence. Disappointed at the prevailing confusion, which left Puerto Rico a possession of the United States, Hostos left for the Dominican Republic where he was appointed Director of the Central College and Inspector General of Public Education. He died in that country in 1905.

Board of Higher Education Chairman Porter R. Chandler declared: "No figure in the history of the Western Hemisphere better represents the relevance of education to needed social and political change than Hostos. The college we name in his honor should provide inspiration, not only for students of Hispanic-American heritage, but to all who are familiar with his remarkable career."

Mayor John V. Lindsay asserted: "In giving his name to this new college, we recognize the contribution all Puerto Rican citizens have made to New York City. We believe the students who attend the institution named in his honor will follow the example of Hostos in using their

Bronx Borough President Herman Badillo, one of the first to advocate a CUNY community college in the South Bronx, said: "It is both fitting and proper that a college directly connected with the South Bronx should be named after Eugenio Maria de Hostos who dedicated his life to improving the education and living conditions of oppressed people throughout Latin America. It is a tribute to the entire Spanish-speaking community in New York City."

Congressman James Scheur, another early advocate of the college and a member of its Advisory Board, said: "I am delighted to have played a role in the development of Hostos Community College. This center of education will change the lives of thousands of Bronxites by providing new horizons which may not have otherwise been open to them. It is appropriate this college be named after Eugenio Maria de Hostos, the most famous Latin American educator."

Congressman Jacob Gilbert, also a member of college's Advisory Board, said: "Hostos was a man whose revolutionary beliefs and convictions led him to actions that far transcended the traditional visions of his time. He was a man who dedicated his life to the benefit and uplifting of the people. I heartily congratulate the City University for dedicating this institution to the
