Returning from its adjournment, Student Council reconvened on September 17, 1970, to continue its work.

The first matter brought before the Council was the new legislation from the BHE, which provided for the Chancellor invoking disciplinary action without the consent of the college presidents, and in opposition to a president if the Chancellor should deem it necessary. At the conclusion of the discussion a member of the Council said, "Now that we have decided that Chancellor Bowker is a dictator, let's go on." Council then took up the matter of unfreezing student activity monies remaining from last term. It was decided to permit organizations to spend up to 25% of their budgets from last term. The action of the Board of Regents in granting a special disbursement from Council of $350 to cover the expenses of their activities in September 18, 1970, was reaffirmed. There was a question as to where the money would come from if Council did not vote the funds. Cooky Burges, Treasurer, questioned the budgetary planning of the Board of Directors. All members met with some opposition as they attempted to secure the funds from the Board of Directors. The Inter-fraternity Council function to be held in the near future. After some discussion, it was decided that the money was available and every one would work towards keeping the money in the hands of the students.

Student Council
Elections Soon
Petitions Ready

Student Council announced on Thursday, September 17, 1970, that petitions for the upcoming elections will be available in the lobby of the Student Union beginning September 21, 1970. Petitions must be completed by Sept. 25, 1970. Elections will be held on Sept. 29, 30, all day.

Bruce Zorn, the director of the elections, said that all council positions must be filled as well as the four student seats on the BCCC and the two seats on the Disciplinary Committee. The positions to be filled on the Council itself are: President, Vice-President, Treasurer and, from each class, a president, a vice-president, and three representatives. The two seats on the Disciplinary Committee, as well as President, Vice-President, and Treasurer and, from each class, a president, a vice-president, and three representatives. The two seats on the Disciplinary Committee, as well as President, Vice-President, and Treasurer and, from each class, a president, a vice-president, and three representatives.

The immediate jobs facing the new Council when it gets elected include the organization of the budget, hearing the creation of a new constitution to comply with the new BHE Article dealing with student affairs. This new article provides for the greater student control over student affairs.

The newly stated intentions of the Board of Higher Education to take disciplinary action from the student control away from the college presidents and give this power to the Chancellor's office was brought to light at the Student Council meeting on September 17, 1970.

The new ruling permits the Chancellor to suspend students in emergency situations, if he so determines. Originally, the power to suspend students rested in the dean of students and the president of a unit college. Now, the Chancellor may suspend students without the consent of the unit college.

Bill Madding, student representative, said that the decision of the Governing Board of the BHE in matters of discipline, which would bypass the original concept of such disciplinary action, seemed to place too much power in Bowker's hands. At Karo added that this "makes Bowker the law." Mr. Karo, who had just returned from a meeting with BHE counsels, said that the intent of this change in disciplinary action was to make it clear to students that no disruption of any kind is to be tolerated. In defining disruption, it is implied, as interpreted by Mr. Karo, that the "Henderson Law" will serve as guidelines and limitations for definitions of disruptions was deleted from the interim statement by the BHE. Passage of the amended version of the change is expected imminently.

The Henderson guidelines were passed by the BHE in June, 1969 so as to buttress the University for aids under Education Law 129A. This law says each institution should be free to determine its own policies and procedures in matters of discipline. It provides for the Board of Higher Education to take disciplinary action with or without the consent of a college president, and leave the determination of an emergency condition up to the Chancellor.

The governing Board of Higher Education was expected to carry out its new duties as the law was passed. The board would meet on a regular basis, considered the following:

- The provisions are designed to provide for trials in absentia. The statement of the BHE, which forms the basis for the news procedures is on page 14.

- It would appear that this action by the BHE is in complete contradiction to statements by Chancellor Bowker on September 11, 1970 in which he indicated that responsibility for disciplinary matters rested with students and faculty at each college and that each college would be permitted to establish its own governing rules. It is clear that the Board of Higher Education has in the past permitted a centralized University power the making of a totalitarian system at CUNY.

$1,712,452 expenditures for student security as contrasted to $7,307,448 for the pre-academic year. He added that "on each campus, procedures have been placed for campus security as contrasted to $7,307,448 for the pre-academic year. He added that "on each campus, procedures have been established to bring faculty and student organizations into direct communication with those in command of those forces."

- Consideration of proposals for "I must say that we are not satisfied with what we have," the chancellor said. He added, "What emerges will not be sweeping in nature. It will certainly be tried and evaluated within the University for aids under Education Law 129A. This law says each institution should be free to determine its own policies and procedures in matters of discipline. Lose on Money Game

By Paul Marker

Dear Editor,

The public holds us accountable for the way we spend the student's dollars, yet our students have no say in how the money is spent. It is the responsibility of the college administration to inform the student of his right to participate. This is the only way the public can be assured that our college is being used in its proper way.

Sincerely,

Paul Marker

Interdepartmental Majors

The Department of Physical Education is allowing a student to complete new course of study. This major enables the student to complete one major of the University of Michigan's Bachelor of General Studies as an example.

The program is designed to be flexible, allowing the student to choose courses from various departments to tailor his or her education to fit their interests. The major also provides opportunities for students to participate in intramural and intercollegiate athletics.

Please note: The sports and other activities listed above are not the only options available. Students can choose from a variety of activities and courses to meet their individual needs and interests. Students are encouraged to join the Interdepartmental Majors program to explore new opportunities and enhance their academic and extracurricular experiences.
signs of improvement

The students are feeling much better about the future of the registration. The interference of the 10th floor of the library has been lifted, and the registrar's office has been moved to the attic. The new office seems more efficient, and the students are happy with the new location.

Undergraduate Education Majors
Have Greater Freedom of Choice

By RENATE BAUMAN

Baruch, N.Y.—T.A. P.S.G., of the University of Vermont's College of Education has resulted in a new undergraduate curriculum in teacher education. The new program is part of a continuing and developmental curriculum involving students with the power to invest as well as faculty members. The group has prepared a list of "learning contracts," which are a self-evaluation involving students with the awareness and acceptance of others. In addition, the program allows faculty members to participate in the learning process. The new program presents an opportunity for students to work for the betterment of their own education and others. Said the University's Dean of Education, "I believe that this new curriculum is the best way to help students develop into better teachers and better citizens." The University will continue to work with the State Board of Education to develop the new curriculum.

Handicapped in College

Baruch students with disabilities are being given greater opportunities to participate in college-level courses. The University has established a new program to assist handicapped students in their college education. Under the program, students with disabilities will be able to participate in college-level courses and earn degrees. The program will be available to students with disabilities who meet the University's academic requirements. The program will also provide support services, such as tutoring, to help students with disabilities succeed in college.

For a scatter to attempt to make the latest registration program a smoothie as possible with signs about the dangers of the practice. One of the signs reads, "At 9:00 p.m., any student who has not registered will be considered absent. Students who are absent will be dropped from the class."

The registration program was introduced as a way to help students make sure they do not miss important deadlines. The program was designed to help students avoid the stress of last-minute registration. The program was introduced in response to students' complaints about the difficulty of registering for classes.

The registration program has been well-received by students. Many students have said that the program has helped them avoid the stress of last-minute registration.

VIOLENCE LOSING ITS CONTROL AT STUDENTS

New York, N.Y. - 95% of all the nation's 7,000,000 full-time college students reject violence of any kind in connection with campus demonstrations, according to the College Poll. In 1968, the figure was 96%.

The widespread preoccupation among the general public as to the volatile campus demonstrations was reflected in a recent Gallup Poll which showed the campus riots were considered among the top domestic concerns of the public. In this atmosphere, facing a wider backlash by the public and possible repressive measures, students are returning to campus this fall with the hope that demonstrations or at the very least, to keep them concerned with campus-oriented problems. The use of violence instead of dialogue have little if any campus backing this year. Student concern about violence centers principally upon black issues and the Vietnarn War. The continuing campus campaign by radicals against the ROTC is another possible rallying point for demonstrations this coming fall.

Students themselves are deeply concerned about the inroads being made on the campus by demonstration and violent incidents. The holding of an ROTC building in Georgia last year brought a strong backlash. Student leaders in symposia this summer have attempted to convince their peers of this.

The deep-seated concern by students as to campus coverage of demonstrations is evident in all the College Poll interviews. The widespread penetration among the general public of the public and possible repressive measures, students are returning to campus this fall with the expectation that demonstrations or at the very least, to keep them concerned with campus-oriented problems. The use of violence instead of dialogue.

The campus for politically-oriented demonstrations will receive less backing from students this year, according to the in-depth College Poll interviews.

Students also back in principle the campus authorities' attempt to take a firmer stand against demonstrators. College Poll interviews show that students believe that demonstrator who break the law should be punished. Most students would also back the policy of dropping students who support violent riots.

Student attitudes also show a hardening toward black demonstrations. The continued campaign by black students on the campus for separation and black identity has alienated a large percentage of the college population, particularly where black students are involved. Students, however, are sympathetic towards the black aims in general but not specific demands for separate facilities, courses and teachers for the black students. On the other hand, students would fight any infringement of black student civil rights. The paradox of the campus scene in the fall of 1970 is a growing concern of students themselves about violence and the fear by students and campus officials alike that a riot may ignite the campus at any time.
