The general faculty voted yesterday to postpone any decision regarding the revision of the academic calendar for a period of two weeks to allow ample time for discussion of the proposal by the entire college community terminating in a general referendum.

Many questions were raised as to how the voting by the students, faculty and administration should be weighed. Some faculty members felt that the proposal should not be adopted unless all three bodies were in favor of the motion. Other members were concerned that the views of the evening and graduate students might not receive ample consideration. It was resolved that the administration would determine both the date of the referendum and the manner in which the votes will be considered.

The proposal basically establishes four sessions for the academic year, as compared to the two main sessions and the one summer session currently employed. For the complete proposal, refer to the March 1 issue of Ticker.

We are pleased that the faculty has seen fit to postpone their decision, since there has not been ample time for all students to study and question the merits or disadvantages of the proposal. We only hope that the faculty does propose ample discussion during class hours in the time available and that students do look into the proposal closely both in and out of the classroom.

Most of all we feel that the administration must devise an equitable method of weighing the ballot, so that all members of the college community are fairly represented. When the proposal was made that the college had N.E.R.O. the plan for it to be implemented. The point made out that the faculty can best determine the outcome regardless of student sentiment.

It seems that for the first time in memory, the B.K.E. has come up with something that benefits the students, and we sincerely hope that the administration does not give the faculty the final word without considering student feelings.

ABORTION

It is the responsibility of the editors to determine exactly what gets printed in Ticker. Advertising receives the same consideration as other forms of literature which are submitted. For this reason Ticker will, until the editors think otherwise, hold no responsibility for the content of any particular advertisement.

Unfortunately for us and our readers as well, it took a treacherous, devious ad for us to realize the bases of those agencies. The ad stated that any woman who used the particular agency would receive, in addition to the abortion, two free tickets to a Broadway show and a free night's stay in a New York hotel.

The majority of these commercial agencies offer no psychological counseling and no post-abortion methods of contraception. It's very easy to start your own referral agency: all you need are a few ads in local papers and you're all set. The cost of the actual operation isn't much under $200, but yet these agencies are getting anywhere from $50-$200 just for talking to you over the telephone. Very often these agencies are representing the representatives of one of these agencies face to face.

IN THE ROOM

February 26, 1969

Remember the good 'ol days of the 50's and 60's, when Baruch was the site of a real scandal? The Daily Sun, a liberal newspaper, published a story about the atmosphere of Baruch's faculty and the administration. The story claimed that the university was run by a bunch of conservative faculty members who were more interested in maintaining their power than in the welfare of the students. This caused a lot of controversy on campus, and some students even marched to protest against the administration.

I was there at the time, and I can tell you that it was a real eye-opener. The faculty members were all dressed in suits and ties, and they looked like they were straight out of a 1950's sitcom. They were all so conservative, and they were all so concerned about maintaining their power.

But the most interesting thing about the story was the way it was written. It was all about the conservative community of Baruch, and how they were all out to save the world. It was all about the power of the conservative faculty, and how they were all out to maintain their authority.

But the truth is, the conservative faculty was just a small minority, and they were all just trying to save the world. They were all just trying to make things better for everyone, and they were all just trying to maintain their power.

But the truth is, the conservative faculty was all just a bunch of old, white guys who were all out to save the world. They were all just trying to maintain their power, and they were all just trying to make things better for everyone.

April 10th is Coming

The role is essentially difficult because of its many different facets. Lawrence's character is at once a military strategist, a poet-philosopher, and a visionary leader. The actor must be able to convey all these aspects convincingly.

Of all these greats, however, Al Pacino's portrayal of Lawrence of Arabia is perhaps the most memorable. His performance is both powerful and at times tender, capturing the very essence of Lawrence's intense and often contradictory nature.

The cinematography, directed by F. A. Young, is also a highlight of the film. The wide angle photography, combined with Lawrence's wide-ranging, often contradictory nature, makes him a compelling character to watch. The actor's performance, combined with the director's vision, creates a plot that is intense, captivating, and thought-provoking. It is for the most part, the story of a man caught up in a struggle that is both intellectual and emotional, and it is a testament to the power of cinema as a medium for exploring the human condition. The film's success is perhaps best summed up by the words of one of its many admirers: "The performance of a lifetime. The role is essentially difficult because of its many different facets. Lawrence's character is at once a military strategist, a poet-philosopher, and a visionary leader. The actor must be able to convey all these aspects convincingly.
HIS COLUMN (04.15) — Nick Nixon managed to fulfill one of his campaign promises and pull a small part of the country together for a few hours this week, allegedly in support of his foreign and domestic policies.

Three thousand radicals, pacifists, construction workers and farmers were waiting on the steps of the Iowa Statehouse when Nixon arrived there to address the State Legislature.

About a thousand more arrived to protest the Indochina War, especially the latest invasion of Laos. The others were farmers and construction workers fed up with Nixon's failure to keep campaign promises and disgusted at his attempts to cover up the gaps.

The administration has singled out high wages as the cause of inflation in the construction industry, and has suspended the federal construction jobs. But, in fact, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics the price of labor is a smaller chunk of the in 1949, 2 percent of the cost of a house now. The biggest increase was actually in the cost of land and financing.

The new wage policy means that bricklayers, the highest paid construction workers, could get less than $4.20 an hour in Iowa, where they normally can work year-round. While Nixon was speaking before the Iowa Legislature, Representative John Culver was assailing the administration's trip as "an obvious road show of snake-oiled Shermanism. . . rural areas are an administration afterthought -ripe for a short photo trip to Iowa to reiterate two years of unfulfilled promises."

Nixon has been blocking the release of $56 million appropriated for rural water and has cut $44.5 million from agricultural conservation programs, and has tried to eliminate the special milk program. Many farmers simply have not income and aren't impressed with the $1.1 billion earmarked for rural development in Nixon's proposed revenue-sharing program.

The different demonstrators were a little uneasy in the same crowd. When peace people chanted "1, 2, 3, 4, we don't want your fucking war," one woman held her hands over her child's ears and a hardhat threatened to wash mouths with soap. But all kinds of people threw snowballs when Nixon emerged from the building to return to his hotel.
