Bernard of Baruch

Innovations in Baruch News 1971

It was also disclosed that the College was working with the management of WMET Radio Station in New York to form a Business News Network. The station's first offer of a weekly show as News Director was accepted by Bernard Smith, another member of the Executive Committee. Bernard Smith said, "It is wonderful to think that a Baruch Professor can help to make the College known to the world through the power of the airwaves." He added that he would do his utmost to make the show a success.

Executive Staff

Elena Vilin, a member of the Executive Staff, said, "I will enjoy the responsibility and contact with the student community." She also said, "It is wonderful to think that a Baruch Professor can help to make the College known to the world through the power of the airwaves."

Changes

Baruch College is no longer just a building on 23rd Street. It is a thriving community college that provides educational opportunities to students of all ages and backgrounds. The College is expanding its facilities and services to meet the needs of the students and the community.

ALL INVITED.
As everyone knows, it is wise to be prudent. But they all have their moments of weakness. They lure us into their snares. They corral us into their traps. Ringing in the air, their voices echo through the night. They paint you pictures of a second life, but tomorrow may be the end. This man feels free, just like a bird, for there's not a sound, not even a word. Rusty's voice was fun; everyone knew that once upon a time clouds moved over the sand. The rains. The water trickled into the frizby at various pots and then fed frizby at various pots and then into the sand. Other rains made waterfalls of the sand. One rain even turned into a small playful meandering stream. The sand castle with four rooms was given an additional room and a backyard and was now a fort made by the perfume bottle that was bought onto the sands by the waves. There is no one way of seeing, being, feeling, or existing. Every human being has tens, or hundreds, or a thousand souls. Each man has a different concept and picture of the world. Each one is right.
The FCC does it again!

On March 5, 1971, the Federal Communications Commission erects a barrier to its licensees requiring them to screen record lyrics prior to airplay. This may be the most illegal action ever taken in this country in the name of television and radio实在.

The first reaction that comes to mind is: is the FCC ruling a violation of the First Amendment? Is this: Is the FCC ruling a violation of the claimed "It will have a similar effect as the Communications Commission sent a report to the FCC last year recommending that the broadcasting industries would have to screen any song encouraging drugs?"

In October of last year, the FCC ruled that any record containing lyrics that advocated the use of drugs would be banned from airplay. The commission said that the rule was necessary to protect the public interest because drugs are a serious social problem. The rule was challenged by the American Association of Broadcasters, which filed a lawsuit to block the rule.

"The song business is now under attack," said George Steinmetz of the association. "We are fighting back."

The FCC chairman, Walter D. Scott, said that the rule was necessary to protect the public interest because drugs are a serious social problem. He added that the rule was not intended to stifle freedom of expression. However, many broadcasters have challenged the rule in court.

Last week, the court of appeals ruled that the rule was invalid. The court said that the FCC had not shown that the rule was necessary to protect the public interest.

The FCC has appealed the ruling to the Supreme Court. The court has not yet decided whether it will hear the case.

In the meantime, the FCC has said that it will continue to enforce the rule. The FCC chairman called the court's decision a "setback" for the agency.

The court has given the FCC 60 days to show that the rule is necessary to protect the public interest.

ACADEMY

by Stephen ColiaDi

There are a lot of big, successful but utile, and brainless blot on the American scene, and I know this because a guy walked up to me in a street and got a tattoo of his name on his face. He was wearing a red shirt and black pants, and I thought he looked pretty cool. He said, "I'm going to be a big star," and I said, "Sure, why not," and we chatted for a while. He told me about his dreams and his plans, and I told him that I wished him luck. Then we parted ways, and I went on my way.

I'm not sure what happened to that guy, but I heard that he became a regular on the Hollywood scene, and that he was pretty successful. I don't know if he was actually a star, but he sure looked like one. And I have to admit, I was a little bit jealous of him. I mean, who wouldn't want to have a tattoo of their name on their face and be a big star? It's not like anyone else could have a tattoo of their name on their face.

But I digress. The point I'm trying to make is that there are a lot of big, successful, but not necessarily good, people out there. And I'm not saying that everyone who is successful is bad, but I do think that there are a lot of people who are successful just because they have the right connections or the right looks or the right name. And that's not fair to the people who are really good and who are working hard to get where they are, but who just don't have the right connections or the right looks or the right name.

So the next time you see someone who is successful, try to remember that there are a lot of other people who are just as good and just as hardworking, but who just don't have the right connections or the right looks or the right name. And try to give them a chance, too.

Sincerely,
