Book Buying The Cheap Way

By Michael Agranoff

When the new term starts, you will see students appearing on campus with boxes or suitcases containing the books they need to complete their course load. As usual, they will like this in hopes of helping to meet the super expensive costs of the books each term by the constant changing of texts each term by the constant changing of texts each term by the constant changing of course requirements. These students, or rather, we should say these students who are members of Sigma Alpha, aren't paid a cent for the time and energy that they contribute. Sam said about the U.B.E. Day. The U.B.E. feel that this is the break because they don't have to pay the ridiculous prices that the regular book store asks. They sold it privately, but the only are the students who sell there books among the buyers of the books are getting a will in turn get 60 percent of the book's costs, if the U.B.E. sells it. They used the past term and they need for their course costs $2.26 and discover that the book they have to turn in books that the average student can't afford. Sam also commented that the students selling the books, that the average student was more concerned about will be distributed between the students life, they would stop changing books each term. The White World Discovers Black English

By Jane and Herbert Diamond

The article is a continuation of the previous discussion on the linguistic studies of Black English in the United States. It discusses the employment of impoverished forms of grammar and syntax by Black Americans and their use of slang and colloquialisms. The authors argue that Black English is a legitimate and valuable form of language, deserving of recognition and respect. They also mention the importance of understanding the cultural and historical context in which Black English has developed.
