I'm sure this has some bearing on the "supposed" lack of enrollment (personally, I think he's running for a job). Prof. Potoker seems to be unaware that many students would like to take more courses, but are not able to do so due to their schedule. Many required courses are offered on Monday and Wednesday, which interferes with other students' schedules. Why not consider offering more courses on Tuesday and Thursday to accommodate the needs of all students.

Prof. Potoker, if you find me objectionable imagine how we see you!!

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

DEAR EDITOR:

I don't wish to engage in a running battle with the English Department but I would like to have the opportunity to answer Ed Potoker's recent letter in TICKER. Please note, Prof. Potoker, that the English Dept. is free to express their opinion in any way they see fit in their letter to the Editor. It is in the spirit of free expression that we encourage all members of the Baruch community to participate in the discussion.

When the college decrees that no course in English is offered, it is not in the spirit of free expression. When the college does not provide a course that students find valuable, it is not in the spirit of free expression. When the college does not provide a course that students find valuable, it is not in the spirit of free expression.

Sincerely,

Zimering Honored by Accounting Society

By BRYNN EPPSON

Professor Max Zimering of the Accounting Department was the guest of honor at a recent meeting of the Accounting Society. The event was attended by many outstanding members of both the Accounting and Law departments. Professor Zimering was presented with a gold watch and other plaques in recognition of his many years of service to the Baruch community.

This past semester, rapidly drawing to a close, has been one of changes for the society. Membership of about 400 people represents more than doubling in the society. This club also received recognition of one of the largest budgets allocated by the Student Activities Board. Meetings have been held on many occasions and have highlighted the society's agenda. It is generally agreed by many that the largest change in the society is the increasing number of members held usually at semester's end. The show-stopper, tutorial programs have been made available for accounting students through the society's cooperation.

As Bill Monroe, the society's secretary, whose absence was noticed by many, was largely responsible for bringing an end to the recession planning and aid of the society. This club also received recognition of one of the largest budgets allocated by the Student Activities Board. Meetings have been held in the society's agenda.
