Six Women Discuss Women's Opportunities In Business

By Nancy Bowker

On Wednesday six prominent businesswomen came to Baruch and spoke about their experiences and opportunities in business for women. The women represented business fields usually considered the exclusive domain of men. They were Muriel Siebert, the first woman on the New York Stock Exchange; Ernesta Procope, head of the largest black-owned insurance firm in America; Mimi Burke, member of an international CPA firm; Shirley Chaitlyn, fashion retailer; Jeanne Frankl, attorney at the Public Education Association; and Susanne Ringlass, vice president of the new publication women Sport (sic).

The Baruch Women's Committee arranged the event and Frances Baruch, the head of this faculty group and Associate Professor of English, opened the event. Mrs. Esther Liebert introduced the speakers. Muriel Siebert advised women that opportunities exist for them in investment analysis, portfolio management, stock brokerage, and banking. She said that women, particularly minority women, are likely to receive preferential treatment. Shirley Chaitlyn, one of the Evening Session representatives of the Task Force, who brought to the group a wealth of knowledge and experience that had been sent over from a graduate student's wine and cheese get-together in the Faculty Lounge. It had been sensed by the student group throughout the evening that all students members of the Task Force and a few faculty members favored the inclusion of the "outsider" students in the decision process. The Task Force looked over some reports that had been submitted by various branches of SPS and seemed quite pleased with the outcome submitted by the Graduate Student Division of the Department. A few committee members wondered out loud if other reports could include both positive and negative comments on interviews, and writers being unit heads (or close derivations thereof) of the branches about which they were assigned to comment upon.

Certain members of the Task Force seemed concerned that the activity of the group would depend on a level of self-referencing on the positive aspects of SPS and a lack of commentary on the negative aspects. However, both Dean Roy Senour, Chairman of the Department and Associate Dean Irving Grotetzki attempted to assure the group that concise, impartial reports could and would be written. It wound up that the committee as a group decided to break down into sub-committees concentrating upon various aspects of SPS, separating Student Activities from Counseling and Testing and so forth. No one on the Committee had serious objection to including anyone in the Baruch Community as "resource people", even if they were not on the Committee.

The next meeting of the Task Force will be in the President's Conference Room on March 28 at 5:30 p.m. and will focus on the sub-committees as well as more responses from unit heads are expected to be studied.

Early Admissions Program: A New And Growing Idea

Every so often new evidence comes to light about the fact that Baruch is doing more than turning out students with slips of paper saying they have extended an institution of higher education. This program's strange phenomenon is what Baruch.

Early Admissions is a fairly new concept (it is only in its second year at Baruch) in education. It enables high school juniors who have demonstrated superior scholarship and the willingness to work to skip their senior year and come to college early, before graduation.

To qualify for the Early Admissions Program, a student must have a colacte average of at least 85%, and present two letters of recommendation, one from a member of the faculty, and another from the administration. In addition, the candidate must demonstrate interest in coming to Baruch, and be interviewed by members of the Early Admissions Committee.

The interview is to enable the committee to judge the maturity and responsibility of the candidate, both important parts of accomplishing college work.

The Early Admissions Committee is composed of a representative of the School of Liberal Arts (this is because most of the students come from these schools). The members are: Prof. Ecolamo of the Math Dept., who is the chairman of the committee; Prof. Todd of the English Dept.; Prof. Lovett of the History Dept.; and Prof. McCarter from the School of Education.

To: Members of the Ad Hoc Committee on Registration

From: Bernice Mintz

I am pleased to advise you that we have been successful in receiving approval from the Central Office of the University to put off the opening of classes for the fall semester to September 19th. This change makes it possible for us to schedule all of our day session, evening session and graduate registration after Labor Day. The only group for which we will delay the registration in the latter part of August is our new entering freshmen.

May I take this opportunity to thank you for your input in our discussions of the scheduling of registration?

SPS Task Force Meets, Begins Study; Divides Into Sub-Committees

The Presidential Task Force to study Student Personnel Services met on March 13 in the President's Conference Room (Fifth Floor, 24th Street Building). Attending were all members of the Task Force plus six students on an "ad-hoc" basis.

Executive Vice-President Bernard Mints opened the meeting at 3:00 p.m., commenting upon the activities of the committee which had begun. Yet after this mild beginning, things between the members of the Task Force seemed to deteriorate markedly.

Professor John Bauer of the Psychology Department stated to the Task Force that perhaps its meetings might be more productive if they were called in an area more accessible to the student population. Mints then accused Bauer of "playing out of (his) cotton-pickers" and that the conference room was wholly adequate for the purpose of the study group some cheese and crackers that had been sent over from a "good person" and each of these has the right to one alternate member to take part in a "good person's" place should be not be able to attend. Other students have been attending on their own, and these do not have their voice or vote at the meetings.

The six "outsider" students in attendance noted that the Task Force was diligent in its careful refusal to recognize the students' presence. One commented later that "at the next meeting, we're going to bring in two candles and a checkered tablecloth. Then we'll send out some reports that had been scheduled in late August."

Relevancy in Education

By JERMAINE GUMBA

There is an age limit for the student who is trying to achieve relevancy in education. Relevant education has become a necessary tool in the world of learning. It is more concerned with practical world needs than concerns other forms of life. Relevancy cannot be determined by age, nor can it be determined by personal beliefs. It is only determined by the learner and his or her time. Relevant education is more concerned with the practical world than with other forms of life. It is the responsibility of the student to determine relevancy. Relevant education has become a necessary tool in the world of learning. Purim Party Held

On Thursday, March 14th, the Hillel Club held a Purim party. The event was arranged by the club's leader, Joel Silverstein. The party was attended by many members of the Baruch College community, as well as students from other institutions. The music was provided by a local band, and refreshments were served throughout the evening. The party was a great success and was enjoyed by all who attended.

R.A.P.E.

By HARRY BASSON

R.A.P.E. stands for "Relevant Art and Performance Experience." The group was formed in 1972 by a group of artists who were concerned with the lack of relevant art in the current society. They felt that art should be more than just a形式 of self-expression, it should also be a form of social commentary. The group's first performance was a series of Lubavitcher dances, which were performed to a traditional Hillel song. The performance was well-received and was attended by many people.

"Paradise Really Lost"

By Michael Fishkin

The Ticker has hit the streets of Union Square Park, Greenwich Village, the Village Voice office, and the Union for Peace office. The Ticker has been distributed to an estimated 2,000 people in the Greenwich Village area.

The Ticker is a new magazine that is being published by the Ticker Association, a non-profit organization.

The Ticker is available at the Student Center for 50 cents.
March 1, 2, and 3, marked the dates of the 212 Arts Workshop. The planning and hard work for this event began many months before and it all started to become a reality on Friday afternoon, March 1, in the Student Center. Approximately 150 students, faculty, and interested people gathered in the Student Center to house this weekend workshop. The community and Coffee House sessions were set for the entire weekend.

While the workshop provided many happy memories for all involved, it was not all of the work, but rather the result of the effort that has been put forth. The planing and hard work for all students, faculty, and community that would be able to reach out beyond their own group of friends, to give people a chance to express their feelings and emotions, rather than skills. People learned a little more about themselves and each other.

The recurring theme throughout the entire 212 weekend was Communication. For people to communicate and listen to each other. Or possibly it appeared in the midst of a party, as bottle of wine was passed around the room, a sense of warmth and love at the 212 workshop was set for the entire weekend.

The students were receptive and gained the satisfaction of realizing a new awareness of their talents and capabilities. Each group worked together and eventually even felt proud and confident enough to further reach past beyond their own little community and to the larger arts work. The talent, skill, and perseverance.

When a legal team of Baruch students, led by David Phillips, went to Williamsville College to compete in the Regional AAU tournament, they were faced with a difficult challenge. The Baruch team was composed of five students — David Phillips, Joe Siroski, Jerry Abin, and Sarah Green — all of whom had been practicing for weeks in preparation for the tournament. The Williamsville team, on the other hand, was composed of four strong players.

Despite the odds, Baruch's team showed great resolve and determination. They fought hard, using their skills and strategies to overcome the obstacles. In the end, they emerged victorious, securing a spot in the national championship rounds.

The team's success was a testament to their hard work and dedication. They had trained rigorously, practicing daily and honing their skills. Their victory was a validation of their efforts and a testament to the power of teamwork and determination.

The trip to the AAU tournament was a memorable experience for the Baruch students. They were able to compete on a national stage, gaining valuable experience and exposure. The trip also served as a bonding experience, strengthening their camaraderie and teamwork.

The Baruch students were proud of their achievement and were grateful for the opportunity to represent their school. They were looking forward to the national championship rounds, where they hoped to continue their winning streak and bring home even more glory for Baruch.

Briloff Topic Is Accounting

Accountancy Professor Abraham J. Briloff, the guest speaker at the March 14th meeting of the Accounting Society, pro- pounded on “Integrity and Accounting.” Professor Briloff explained that the first issue to be decided is, “Why accountancy?” Answering his own question, Professor Briloff demonstrated that the personal fulfillment to be gained from the profession must have equal weight with its material advantages.

Professor Briloff firmly believes that accounting depends upon independence, integrity, and ingenuity. “Not only responsible to his client, the accountant is answerable to the government and the consumer. The accountant is the historian of the corporate entity, just as the historian is the recorder of civilization.”

Professor Briloff is critical of the educational systems used to train accounting students today. He feels that the students lack sufficient background in the philosophical aspects of the profession.

Society now attaches great importance to the role of the corporation in society. There is a growing need for a new professionalism. Professor Briloff cited the growing need for a “social audit” concerned less with profits and less the social relevance of the corporation.

kitchen to offer me a job,” she said. Ma. Chaltyn stressed the need for the ability to “sell” oneself, and the importance of good appearance in making a favorable impression on a prospective employer.

Attorney Jeanne Franci noted the irony in the legal profession, which engages in sex discrimination and is involved in preventing it. She said that the Law School Aptitude Test is a good predictor of success in law school, although not necessarily of success in the profession. She advised women considering the law as a career to take the exam. Some aspects of practicing law are very intellectually demanding and other aspects can provide contact with people, according to Ms. Franc.

Rebecca Doughty, who will be working with Hilis Year King Co., described women accountants as “involved women.” She described women accountants as contributing to the success of the profession.

ADS In The Running

By Reva Ross

This is directed to anyone, but especially those who remember a certain small article on the front page of Ticker, November 29, 1973. (I wonder how many do remember?). The terrible title was “ADS MEETS” — it was an update on the Advertising Society’s activities. The topic was a weekend seminar in a “big old house,”udpated from various agencies at the old house and basically a good learning experience.

Well folks, the weekend has been since passed. It really was an enjoyable learning experience. As a matter of fact, you can see several pictures from this particular weekend on bulletin boards on the 13th and 14th floors. Only when you are enjoying themselves can you get some of the “goonies” called shots — you like those on the 13th and 14th floors.

Right now, ADS is involved in a national competition. The objective? Plus a magazine: a certain well-known manufacturer. who want to go into business, but distressing to this reporter was the seeming lack of awareness of changes in women’s attitudes. All but one said that her chosen profession was good for a woman because she would have time to be a wife and mother as well as a career woman. Several of them referred to special qualities of women, such as “being good with people,” and also suited to keeping detailed bookkeeping records,” abilities which are not really peculiar to women.

Edie Ate, Mrs. Pappy, Director of Admissions, and Mr. Quiñones, who handles the administrative and recruitment aspects of the program. The School of Business has just recently endorsed the program, and they will soon form own Early Admissions Program for business students.

Early Admissions is one of the few programs where all parties involved benefit. Baruch gets students who have achieved academically, while the students are given a head start in their college career. Furthermore, the program offers certain advantages not available to most freshman. These include close curricular guidance, and the choice of any course. During their first semester at Baruch, all of the students are in one English class. Their Freshman Orientation, in the form of lectures, given by members of the Early Admissions Committee, is part of this course, thereby exempting the students from having to attend the regular Freshman Orientation.
