Police Arrest Two At 23 St. Building

By Rafael A. Olmeda, Jr.

A Baruch College student and his friend were arrested in front of the 23 St. building on Oct. 22, after an altercation with police officers bought out over a dozen angry students complaining about harassment and racism.

Tyrone Greeves, senior, and his friend Mitchell Fuchs were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct and probation released. According to Fuchs, he was in front of 17 Lexington Ave., with Greeves and third Baruch student, Godfrey James. The two had been drinking beer out of a bottle when a police officer approached them and said they were not allowed to do that.

According to James, they believed the officer was referring to drinking out of the bottle, so they obtained paper cups and were drinking out of those. Fuchs, who is white, says the officer then returned and told them that they were not allowed to drink at all.

"He said to move around to the other side of the building," Fuchs said, adding that the officer did not want his supervisor to see them drinking. But Fuchs and James coccur that instead of moving where they could drink, the three put the cups away and remained in front of the building.

The officer then approached a third time but were still there and refused to be moved. Fuchs and James were still drinking, said Fuchs.

LaMarre Walks Out On USS Meeting

By Jonathan Loring

An altercation involving CUNY student leaders attempting to block University Student Senate Chairman Jean C. LaMarre from leaving a plenary session held at Baruch College on Oct. 24 led Baruch students and administrators to wonder if the USS was still a viable organization.

Most of the USS delegates present doubted LaMarre's capacity to be chairman of the USS. However, the very next day, LaMarre was certified as the re-elected Chairman of the Senate by a Student Election Review Committee (SEB). It had met to weigh the validity of four separate appeals filed on the election process which occurred Oct. 13.

The plenary session was scheduled to start at 8:00 p.m. at Baruch's cafeteria at 17 Lexington Ave. Approximately an hour later, LaMarre announced, "We are still two short of quorum. I would like to adjourn."

"We never adjourned the meeting because the meeting was never called to order," he continued, "with threats of harassment and indications of that such, the chairman found it in his best interest of his own welfare to leave that body to leave the environment."

Various student leaders present at the meeting, denied any threats were made against LaMarre until he attempted to leave the cafeteria.

Ethnic Studies

The Baruch College library has just published a new pathfinder on Ethnic Studies. It outlines a search strategy for researching various ethnic groups, using the reference sources such as the Harvard Reference Handbook to American Ethnic Groups. If you are interested in learning how your ethnic group is represented in catalogs, indexes and handbooks, pick up a copy at the Reference Desk or the 4th floor of the library. This guide is the latest in the series of pathfinders published by the Library.

Jeffries Appearance Draws Little Protest

Jeffries, who was known for his fiery speeches and confrontational style, arrived at the protest, but his appearance drew little notice. The crowd was dispersed and calm, with few signs of the auchastic atmosphere that had accompanied previous demonstrations.

The protest, which had been organized by the Student Government Association, was held to call attention to issues of racial equality and social justice. Jeffries, who had been a vocal advocate for these causes, was expected to speak at the event. However, his arrival was met with little fanfare.

Several hundred flyers containing the words "Your Right to" had been distributed throughout the campus, but there was little evidence that the message had reached the majority of the student body.

"They don't want to hear the truth," said one student, who had been active in previous protests. "They want to hear the lies and the propaganda."
LaMarre Walks Out on USS Meeting

By Eric Loyola

A Baruch student allegedly threatened to percede out attend­

ments and announced to the meeting that he would not vote for Ms. Solis. It was a surprise to those attending the meeting, as many had expected the vote to go in favor of Ms. Solis.

LaMarre, who was later found to be the individual who allegedly threatened to leave, was asked to remain in the meeting and was given the opportunity to explain his actions. He stated that he was upset because his proposal had been rejected and that he felt that the USS was not adequately representing the students.

After the vote, the USS leadership proceeded to go over the remaining agenda items and concluded the meeting.

Jeffries' Baruch Visit

There are a number of observations we noted concerning the panel discussion on multicultural education which was held at Baruch on Oct. 17. The most prominent speaker was Multicultural Coordinator Rafael De LaMarre, who was accompanied by three other speakers: Angela Terry, director of the Multicultural Office; Zohra Al-Azami, director of the Women's Center; and Zora Figueroa, Coordinator of Multicultural Affairs.

These looking to attack Jeffries at the first hint of anti-Semitism in his 100-minute presentation were either disappointed or even surprised by his presence. Jeffries had said that he would not attend the meeting, but he did. Apparently nobody forgot to tell him that this was a panel discussion, and not the "Leopard Jefferson Show." This served to deter the threat of those in attendance who were looking forward to an open, open discussion on the merits and challenges of expanding the curriculum. Jeffries' speech cut into the most important and interesting part of any panel discussion—the question and answer period, which was done away with as masses of students just walked in and left as soon as he was done.

Another problem we had with the panel was its toxic lack of diversity of opinion. Isn't a panel supposed to provide the audience with opposing viewpoints so that both sides of an issue can be covered? Why didn't anyone on the panel oppose the multicultural agenda in its present form? The "security" measures that were taken once the audience was inside the auditorium were offensive. Our bodyguards were offensive. Different people were watching the audience from every angle, right at home, with empty threats of expusion and arrest. Since when does Jeffries get more protection than anyone else speaking? To mention the fact that music and faculty did not attend there because they had open minds and were willing to hear what Jeffries and the other panellists had to say. We are not animals, Mr. Purdy. We're human beings.

Finally, making could have been in a worse position than to have the costumers of the Multicultural Curriculum Committee. In fact, the three panellists were standing in front of the auditorium audience, only to hear Keney John, president of Club America, say that this ethically diverse group represented multiculturalism. The curriculum was a good idea, and we don't mean to take away from that, but it was out of place (to say the least).

We only hope that the next time a panel on multiculturalism is held there is true diversity of opinion and respect for those in attendance.

The University Student Senate brought its unique brand of politics to Baruch College on Oct. 4. We were not impressed. Chairman Jose C. Marquez showed an unjustified amount of callousness by walking out on a meeting where a quorum of 13 members was not reached. As far as we know, the 13 members of the Senate who never showed up was Marquez himself. The 13 members of the Senate who never showed up was Rafael Martinez himself. engaged in a shouting match with LaMarre's associates. The attempts by some in attendance to say that this might be an outgrowth of the presence of the students were as irresponsible as they were ill-advised. Do you mean to tell us that the very sin of the University Senate is not enough at every US Senate meeting held in the past? We have heard the yells that got on us. We have seen the literary efficiency and total lack of respect for both of our opinions. We have been left outside and also been the center of a lot of elevators in the Baruch College. We were glad to see them go. We hope our own administration see to it that no more riots return to Baruch until it learns respect itself and its host.

To Serve and Protect?

If you haven't noticed by now, police have been stationed outside of Baruch College ever since the attempted building quorum could have been established. By leaving, LaMarre and Marquez (us).

F.O.I.: A BUNCH OF NICE GUYS?
By Jonathan Loring
In today's world, the political scene can often be isolating, and one told me a definition of the world of politics and government from any fundamentalist Muslim. "The fundamentalist Muslim world is divided by those who think of the world as being divided into two parts: those who are on the right side of the world, and those who are on the left. Those who are on the right side of the world are the ones who believe in God's will and obeys the things that God dictates. Those who are on the left side of the world are the ones who think that they are above God's will and do not obey the things that God dictates." This definition of the world is very similar to the fundamentalist Muslim world's view of morality and spirituality. The Print Media Returns to Crown Heights

By Lenny Vigilante

At the time of the August 1991 riot in Crown Heights, Brooklyn, tensions were high, and the media played a significant role in shaping public perceptions of the event. The incident was driven by Yosef Lifsch, a 22-year-old Hasidic man who shot and killed a seven-year-old black child named Gavin Cato in an incident that became known as the Crown Heights riot.

The media covered the event extensively, with competing narratives that highlighted differing aspects of the situation. For example, The New York Times characterized the rioters as a group of black youths, while the Village Voice depicted the incident as an act of revenge against the Hasidic community.

Music Fest '91 WBMB Style

Baruch College has its own radio station, WBMB, which is trying to entice more students to listen to the show by displaying its musical forms on the airwaves. WBMB Style will fill the jazz bill. They describe their music as that, "Primarily white students and others like it continue to cater to the mass market."

Students' Center Program Government, Puerto Ricans for Social Justice, and other students have expressed concern over the lack of West Indian presence at Baruch. Chief Librarian, Denise Vigliotti, said, "WBMB is alive and here to stay."

There was an initial concern among some students about the type of music and audience. Music Fest '91 will appeal to Baruch students and others like it continue to cater to the mass market. The organizers chose this form of music to appeal to a wide audience. There was an initial concern among some students about the type of music and audience. They’re Creepy And They’re Spooky...

By Robert Byrnes

On November 22, Gomez and Morticia return as the Amblins are set to release the motion picture "The Addams Family" in movie theaters across the country. If you’ve noticed there are two names that don’t sound familiar (Ollie and Margaret), that’s because the film is directly based on the original animated series that aired from 1964-1973. In the series, there is the perfect couple, and in the film, they are played by John Rhys-Davies and Carol Spinney as Gomez and Morticia, respectively.

The premise of the film is as follows: The Addamses are the inner workings of a normal family. Morticia, the housewife and the one who can save the family. Gomez plays along with the hand-dipped servant Thing. And when the rough part is over they just get on the side line as all other Americans do. In the film, we see the Addamses are $4,000 per person, Coffin Makers, and "The Creepy Crawlies," and then suddenly appears at the roles will be played by Don Schmidt and Anthony Dacunto. This is his first production here.

His greatest stuff is which could easily fill four CD’s. The film is "The Addams Family," is a direct result of the original 1960’s classic television series. The film is directed by Barry Sonnenfeld, who makes his directorial debut with "The Addams Family," through his production company, "Knotty People." The film is based on the book by the great writer, Roald Dahl. The film was shot on location in Washington, D.C., Delaware, and New Orleans. The film is a result of the commonwealth of Americans do not believe the President Kennedy assassination can be explained by one man, one gun. Instead, there is a film that explores the idea that one man and one gun were not enough to explain the murder of President Kennedy. Also coming in late November from Paramount Pictures is "A Million Ways to Die in the West," starring Leslie Bibb, as a department store manager. The film is based on the book by Stephen King. The film is directed by Robert O’Brien. The film is a result of the commonwealth of Americans do not believe the President Kennedy assassination can be explained by one man, one gun. "City Of Hope"

City Of Hope: Starring Vincent Perez, Tony Lo Bianco, John Sayles and Angela Bassett; Written & Directed by John Sayles; Produced by J. L. Stevenson & John Sayles; Directed by John Sayles

Hudson City, New Jersey is a small town with a big problem. Nick Rinaldi, a man with integrity, has yet to forgive his brother, who died in the line of duty. He has a disabled son that he calls this helping. And, attractive young woman falls in love with him. Director John Sayles and Angela Bassett

"City of Hope" has an interesting story line and plot. The characters are given a unique perspective. Nothing is as it seems. The pace of this movie, even the plot, twists and turns. The story line is easy to follow and turns again. The characters are well-developed and the story is well-told. John Sayles makes a strong point about the fact that even those who don't usually care about real life, and that hope is the only factor.

The Baruch Theater Group and a preview of "Wait Until Dark"

By Philip Reid

It's been a long time since I've seen a play that tickles the funny bone of my soul and brings me to tears. It is quite rare to find a play that will make me laugh, cry, and think all at the same time. However, this play did just that for me. "Wait Until Dark" is a play that has been around for quite some time and has been performed by many different groups. However, the Baruch Theater Group's production of this play was a refreshing and unique take on a classic.

The story is about a woman named Amanda who is blind and has been living in a dark room for most of her life. She is about to inherit a large sum of money and plans to use it to set up a charity for the blind. However, she is being watched by a group of criminals who want to rob her and take the money. They break into her apartment and try to get to the money, but Amanda is not about to let them have it. The play is full of suspense, tension, and humor as Amanda tries to outsmart her attackers and protect the money.

The acting in this production was fantastic. Each actor brought their character to life in a unique and authentic way. The chemistry between the actors was evident and added to the overall enjoyment of the play. The set design was simple but effective, with just enough to convey the setting of the play.

Overall, "Wait Until Dark" is a must-see production. The Baruch Theater Group's take on this classic is a breath of fresh air. It is a play that will leave you thinking about the importance of empathy, compassion, and the power of the human spirit. I highly recommend this production to anyone who loves theater and wants to experience a unique and memorable performance.
LUCY BROWN

Lucy Brown's vocal performance is a treat. Her voice is strong, clear, and full of emotion. She has a great range and is able to convey a wide variety of emotions. Her delivery is very engaging and keeps the listener interested throughout the song.

The music in Lucy Brown's music is very well composed. The melodies are catchy and the harmonies are well done. The production quality is also very good. The overall sound is very professional and polished.

The lyrics in Lucy Brown's music are very well written. They are thought-provoking and are able to convey a message. The themes in the song are relevant and the lyrics are very well written. The message in the song is very clear and is able to be understood by the listener.

In conclusion, Lucy Brown's music is very good. The vocals, music, and lyrics are all very well done. The performance is very engaging and the overall sound is very professional. I would recommend this artist to anyone who enjoys good music.

Baruch's Tennis Team Finishes in Close Second

By David Amir

Co-aptancy. That is the word that best describes the past six years for the Baruch Women's Tennis team. In these six years the team has either finished in first or second place.

This season the team finished in several places. Bill Eng said, "They were both tied with the other team. We ended up second in the final match. And, the third match was lost to Hunter in the final round.

Since there were five teams in the tournament, the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth teams played in the CUNY Championships.

On the year Irina Shniderman had a record of 1-1 in the matches, the number one player in CUNY. If she keeps up her performance, she could win a CUNY title. The record is three straight titles. Eng said, "I think, we have ourselves a great tennis team."

FDR drive and 6th street. Baruch will play C.W. Post on Thursday at 4:30 p.m. The team is coming off a win against Lehman College by a score of 12-1. "All of our frustration came out in the game," said Henry.

The other top scorers are Andy Daniels and Beth Pena. Andy Daniels scored four goals. "I think, we have ourselves a great tennis team."
