17th Annual Leadership Weekend Resonates With Sun, Self-Esteem and Around-the-Clock Activities

Baruch students from 24 organizations assembled at the entrance of the 26th Street building to embark on the college’s 17th annual Leadership Training Weekend voyage on Friday, Nov. 4. Excited voices chattered away as bags were loaded, the roll was called, and final good-byes were made to loved ones. 87 of the 92 students who registered filled the two Campus buses that made the two hour long trip to the Holiday Hills Conference Center in Pawling, NY. Throughout the long ride, reggae, R&B and salsa and merengue music warred for domination. That atmosphere continued at the late night parties that students enjoyed.

"It was a most rewarding weekend," said Graceann Hall, the Ticker’s business editor. "The participants attended mandatory sessions including juggling and the five steps to being great.

"The activities are supposed to communicate, through experience, some kind of cognitive training," said Marcy M. Roe, director of student life. After welcoming them, Aylman immediately led them through a series of exercises, including juggling and "the five steps to being great.

"The activities are intended to help students build self-esteem," said Ola Farnum, an officer of Toastmasters. "I learned how to argue my point in a large group and not alienate the people you are leading," said Graceann Hall, The Ticker’s business editor.

President Talks To Ticker Reps About Baruch

Numerous issues addressed by interim president

By David Blanks
Editor-in-Chief

The security officer, a fixture on the seventh floor of the 22nd street Administrative Building, is no longer there. Instead, there is an empty desk and a lonely corridor. The glass doors that open into the hallway leading to the president’s office are no longer locked.

There is a sharp contrast between what was and what is. About three months ago, a security officer buzzed in all visitors only after receiving clearance from the President’s Office. But that was then.

"I don’t believe in security guards and gates," says Interim President Sidney L. Litzman. "It’s a college, not a prison. The first thing I did was remove the guards. There’s no reason to separate faculty and administration from students.”

The break with formalities and frills is apparent by the sparse interior of the Interim-President’s office. The walls are free of plaques, the desk is devoid of brick or bract. It appears as if the office hasn’t been moved into.

"I’m not new to administration. I know this institution pretty well. I was acting provost for continued on page 3

First Glance at Seminar Classes For Freshmen

By Omolara Laniyan
Staff Writer

If you’ve ever wondered what exactly was going on in that class next door where you saw about 10-20 freshmen sitting together in a semi-circle discussing life, wonder no more. What you saw was probably just a freshman seminar class in action.

All incoming Baruch students are required to take a freshman seminar class before they graduate. Who are freshmen seminars you ask? Freshman seminars are designed to begin the freshmen year, for the means to meet other incoming students, interact with each other and make new friends. At a school as large as Baruch, without dorms or an official campus, this is an important concern. Being that the majority of freshmen are coming straight from high school and do not know very much about continued on page 5
Baruch Graduates Reunite After Their Experiences In Real World

By Olga Pirzivais

On Wednesday, Nov. 3, Baruch College Alumni Association held its annual Fall Mixer at the Morgan William restaurant located at 35 Broadway.

Nearly 75 people crossed into business attire and attended. Two semester months checked (00) for the first time in Baruch Alumni Office. The group made sure that only Baruch students entered.

According to Mark Abramovits, second vice president of the Alumni Association, "The Alumni Association offers graduating students various benefits including mentorship programs, networking, monthly meet-ups, and interviews. It added that he "offers all graduate students a free one-year membership."

The purpose of the event is to gather Alumni, to reconnect, and to socialize, and John Hubela, a 1979 graduate and Alumni association member No. 1 is probably the best thing that alumni and current professors can get involved with, he added.

According to Margot Baruch, a 1993 graduate and mother of the Alumni connection, "I think people should try those welcoming events."

(Alumni Association) originals reach more members said Baruch. She asked that all students visit websites. Students can sign in for various programs from their backgrounds. Afternoon, a 1993 graduate who currently works Goldman Sachs, has been thinking about going to graduate school, and Baruch. "What do you think about the Alumni Association is offering any programs to graduate school?"

"I'm interested in your program, and to see what's going on in your field, says Caroline Saint.

Erica S. Frederick, former vice president of College Advancement, resigned her position earlier this semester to become the Vice President of Manhattan. According to the Baruch Office of College Advancement, Frederick was responsible for raising the colossal sum of over $72 million from donations and co-chair of the Alumni committee, "It is probably the best effort to reconnect, and to socialize," said Hubela. "Alumni Association offers graduating students various benefits including mentorship programs, networking, monthly meet-ups, and interviews."

Hole in Ozone Traced to Single Cow

It's a littler time at Parnassus, and a young woman begins to group (after this fall year, they will have to learn some of their component and take several more classes in their own field.)

The story begins in the fall of 1999, when John Watanabe, the director of the Institute of Molecular Biology at the University of Oregon, was walking down a street in Portland.

"I was walking down the street, and I saw a cow with a hole in its eye," Watanabe said. "I couldn't believe it. I took a picture and sent it to my friend in Japan."

Watanabe's friend, a researcher at the Institute of Molecular Biology, was so interested in the story that he called Watanabe the next day.

"He said, 'I've been reading about cows with holes in their eyes, and I think we should investigate this,'" Watanabe said. "So we started looking into the story and found out that there was a cow in Japan that had a hole in its eye."

The cow, named "Fido," had been diagnosed with a rare condition called "ocular perforation." The hole in its eye was caused by a small piece of glass that had entered the cow's eye.

Watanabe and his team conducted a series of experiments to understand the cow's condition. They found that the cow's eye had been compromised by the glass, and that it had caused a permanent damage to the eye.

"Our results showed that the cow's eye was indeed damaged by the glass," Watanabe said. "We found that the glass had caused a disruption in the eye's epithelial cells, which are responsible for maintaining the eye's health."

The team also found that the cow's body had responded to the injury by producing a large amount of fluid in the eye, which can cause pressure and damage to the eye.

"We found that the cow's body had produced a large amount of fluid in the eye," Watanabe said. "This can cause pressure and damage to the eye, which can lead to further complications such as inflammation.

The team concluded that the cow's condition was caused by the glass that had entered its eye, and that it was a rare and unusual condition.

Watanabe's findings have been published in a recent issue of the Journal of Experimental Biology, and have been hailed as a major breakthrough in understanding the effects of glass on the eye.

"Our findings have important implications for understanding the effects of glass on the eye," Watanabe said. "They may help us better understand the effects of glass on other organs as well.

Watanabe and his team are now working on further experiments to understand the effects of glass on other organs, and to develop new treatments for this rare condition.

In conclusion, the story of the cow with the hole in its eye is a reminder of the importance of understanding the effects of glass on the body. With more research, we may be able to develop better treatments for this rare condition and others like it.

Graduates Headed to Wall St., Silicon Valley, Attica to Stay in Touch Via eCircles

For many years, eCircles has been a popular platform for students and professionals to stay in touch and network. With the advent of the internet, the platform has become even more popular, as people can now connect with each other from anywhere in the world.

"I started using eCircles when I was in college," said John Smith, a recent graduate. "I used it to stay in touch with my classmates and to network with other professionals.

"I found that eCircles was a great way to stay in touch with people," Smith said. "It's a great way to meet new people and to find new opportunities.

"I'm glad that eCircles is still around," Smith said. "It's a great platform for students and professionals to connect.

With the recent graduates heading to Wall Street, Silicon Valley, and Attica, eCircles is expected to continue its popularity. The platform is expected to continue to provide students and professionals with a great way to stay in touch and network.

Deepavali - "The Festival of Lights"

Deepavali is both a social and religious testi­ fication of a people. It is enmity and a symbol of love; it is war and peace; it is the good and the bad; it is the old and the new; it is the past and the future.

Deepavali is celebrated by lighting lamps and candles, and by singing devotional songs and distributing sweets. It is a festival of lights, and it is a time of hope and joy.

The festival begins on the fourth day of the month of Ashvin, and it lasts for five days. The first day is celebrated as Chaturdashi, and it is dedicated to lights and prayers to the Goddess Lakshmi. The second day is Narka-Chatukut, and it is dedicated to the goddess Durga. The third day is Dhan, and it is dedicated to the Goddess Lakshmi. The fourth day is Padwa or Var­

Local Band to Online Vomiting

On the night of October 1, 2019, the band FFF (Former Friends on Facebook) was performing at a local bar in Portland. The crowd was enthusiastic, and the band was winning over the audience with their catchy tunes.

Suddenly, one of the band members, John Doe, began to vomit on stage. The crowd was shocked, and the band was taken aback. However, they quickly regained their composure and continued playing, using the event as a unique opportunity to entertain the audience.

The incident garnered a lot of attention on social media, and FFF became an internet sensation. Their performance became a viral video, and they gained a large following online.

Your Own Meeting Place in Cyberspace!
“Make A Difference Day
Lives Up To It’s Name

By: Jennifer Dug

On Saturday, November 9th, the Baruch Students for Baruch Service volunteered their time and energies in aid of Chase Manhattan Bank’s Global Day of Service.

Volunteers were spread all over New York City, though by far the most popular location was Greenwich Village.

When we arrived there, we were greeted by Argentina C., who handed us our assignments and gave us instructions on what to do.

Our job was to transform an average street corner in Greenwich Village into a public place of refuge and charity.

We spread out throughout the area, each group performing different tasks.

One group was responsible for distributing flyers, while another was engaged in face-painting.

Yet another group organized a minute’s silence to remember those who had suffered in the past.

Throughout the day,
we encountered many people who were amazed by our efforts.

They stopped to converse with us,
expressing their appreciation for our work.

One woman, in particular,
mentioned that she had never seen anything like this before.

“Thank you so much for what you’re doing,” she said.

“I can’t believe that people actually care about charity anymore.”

Another man, who had just come from a business meeting, said:

“Wow, I didn’t expect anything like this. It’s really refreshing to see people coming together for a good cause.”

By the end of the day,
we were exhausted but satisfied.

We had accomplished
what we set out to do,
and we knew that our efforts would make a real difference in someone’s life.

It was a truly rewarding experience, and we look forward to participating in more such events in the future.

Prehistoric Man
Reaon to Toilet

An article by John Dug

In ancient times, humans lived in conditions that required them to find ways to manage their waste products.

The most common method of disposing of urine and faeces was through natural burial or simply burying it in the ground.

However, as societies
became more organized,
people began to live in more densely populated areas, which required a more efficient system for handling waste.

One such innovation was the invention of the closet, which allowed people to dispose of their waste in a more controlled manner.

Over time, toilets
became more advanced,
with the development of flushing systems and sewage treatment plants.

Today, toilets are an integral part of modern sanitation systems, and their design continues to evolve to meet the needs of society.

Supermodels to Discuss Addition, Subtraction

A group of international supermodels will be visiting New York City to discuss the importance of mathematics in their careers.

The models will be joined by several mathematicians who will be providing insights into the mathematical concepts involved in their work.

The event will be hosted at a prestigious clothing store in the heart of the city, where guests will have the opportunity to meet the models and mathematicians.

The afternoon will include a panel discussion, followed by a Q&A session with the models.

Guests will also be invited to participate in hands-on activities related to the mathematical topics being discussed.

The event is open to all, and tickets can be purchased through the Study Reveals Ping Pong Players Have Most Sex

A new study published in the international journal “Science” has revealed that ping pong players engage in more sexual activity than other people.

The research was conducted over several years, with participants taking part in regular ping pong matches.

It was found that ping pong players had a significantly higher number of sexual partners compared to other individuals.

The study concluded that participation in ping pong may contribute to increased libidinal activity, with participants reporting feeling more sexually aroused during matches.

THE LAST GREAT SHOW OF THE CENTURY!
"What we have here, is a failure to communicate"

Dear Baruchians,

About three weeks ago, a tragic accident occurred in the management of our campus. A beloved professor suffered a stroke in front of his class.

Did anyone hear about this? Was The Ticker, Your Newspaper, notified of the unfortunate occurrence?

No!

No, not the students, not the Management Department, not even our acting president publicly acknowledged the accident to the larger Baruch community. People went about as if nothing happened.

No matter that this professor was advanced in age and was teaching here, financially uncom- pensated, but simply out of the goodness of his heart.

That does not give administration the right to keep information like this from students.

How will that professor feel when he gets out of ICU and finds out that after spending all these years here providing insightful instruction, his fate was regarded as "nothing but another accident?"

Is that how you properly honor such noble souls who care less about the money and more about true education?

With all the talk about an open relationship between students and administrators, you'd think they would at least see fit to bring the issue out in the open so students could at least offer the family some support.

Is that the kind of school you want to be a part of? One where students just listen to professors in a talk, see each other later in the street or on the elevator, look at each other in the eye, and turn away?

Where is the COM-UCS-NA-CA?

How are we to live a community when we don't or can't communicate?

Raising academic standards isn't only the policy that politicians should mouth about. The conscious level of students should be aware of their professors, their classmates, services, activities, courses, and choices, should also be raised.

If you are aware of any incident that affects you, and therefore all of us, in any way, can you please contact us.

Sincerely,

The Ticker

Politics and Stuff: Why You Should've Voted Last Week

By Mark Williams

Two parties against the people. When have we ever had a chance like that? It is a shame that on that day, yet another disparity that doesn't exist in the rest of the world. It is a shame that we have a choice at all.

Now is the time to come together and make our voices heard. It is time to re-vote and show our support for the candidates who represent our interests.

Statistics show that only 40% of the eligible voters actually cast their ballots. This means that only a small percentage of the population participates in the political process. It is time for us to speak up and let our voices be heard.

The future of our country depends on us. Let's come together and make a difference. Vote today.

Wyman began acting to gain attention and looked to his father as a role model. His father performed in a community theater, including a performance of The Mousetrap. Wyman was eight years old, his father was forty. So Wyman, who describes himself as "an outcast," became involved in theater to please people, and eventually that talent grew into a career.

Despite his early interest in acting, Wyman did not pursue acting as a career immediately after high school. He attended Harvard College and excelled in his classes. After graduating from Harvard, Wyman worked with a pre-Broadway tour and eventually landed a role in the show. Wyman was ecstatic to land a role of Thenardier, which has lasted for over 2 years. This is where Thenardier hits the audiences with his point of view on God, which is a major turning point in the character.

Despite the misfortunes of his character, Wyman himself feels gratitude towards his career. He says that he is successful most of the time. Wyman relates to Thenardier, who believes that after all of his misfortunes, he still has his family. Wyman says that he has a real sense of family on stage, which is a unique experience for him.

The show begins with a chorus line of actors on stage, ranked in order of importance. The story of les Misérables is one of the most important musicals ever created. It is a story of love, hope, and redemption.

The show is performed by a large cast of actors, including Wyman. The characters are complex and well-developed, and the story is a blend of comedy and tragedy. Wyman works primarily with an actress named Fuschia, who plays Cosette. They have a great chemistry on stage, and Wyman says that he gets along well with her.

Wyman is the second male lead in the show, and the character is very complex. He has to deal with a lot of different emotions and situations. He says that he has to be careful not to overact, and he has to be careful not to underact.

Wyman says that he always has a good time on stage. He says that he has a real sense of family on stage, which is a unique experience for him. Wyman also feels that there is a real sense of family on stage, which is a unique experience for him.

Love Like A Vampire

My guide in my search for "me"

In love and in loss

And all things unknown

Faith will be my guide

Need I fear

Need I hope

Each new face, the hope of companionship

Each new day, the hope of a new beginning

Under the light of their hands

Of unspoken thoughts

Of the rippling waters

Rolling forever across the earth song

With the gentlest grace

Of the wind that blew by the night sky

And bounding over the rippling waters

It was a strange dream, like so many scattered rays of moonlight

They are our hopes and dreams

always traveling with the turning of the earth

forever tasting

forever running across the eternal landscape

away from the heart song and nightmares

That rise over the night

and soap in their feet...

And the dancing of the light

when all those sweet dreams dissolve

into the first shining rays of the dawn sun.

Into the Darkness

Under the cloak of a wealthy mountain sky

And over the rough and barren terrain

Their journey swift as the wind

Taking to the wind, majestically as the dancing of the night.

With the illuminated stars

Of the scents of the mountains and the sky

And bounding over the rippling waters

Of our unspoken thoughts

Like so many scattered rays of moonlight

They are our hopes and dreams

always traveling with the turning of the earth

forever tasting

forever running across the eternal landscape

away from the heart song and nightmares

That rise over the night

and soap in their feet...

And the dancing of the light

when all those sweet dreams dissolve

into the first shining rays of the dawn sun.
